Writing

I understand words of Charles Dickens the following way: the more you postpone things you gotta do, the more time you waste.

I suppose it's obvious that it's always better to do duties beforehand, so you'll have more free time, as a result.

For example, I'm tend to procrastinate, so I'm idle most of free time, which is bad. I'd rather play computer games the whole evening, than do homework for the next few days. As a result, I wait until the deadline and don't get enough sleep doing my homework.

But what if I hesitated to do chores just on time? For sure, I'd have more free time because I wouldn't have to think about the work undone.

Also, avoidance of a activity leads to anxiety. You get much more stress because you constantly think about things you have not done yet.

So, if you collar your procrastination, you'll live a happier life. Procrastination is an awfully time-wasting thing. Collar it. And be a better self.
