Writing

Charles Dickens is a world-wide famous English writer. Shall we discuss ~~at~~ one of his quotations?

Procrastination is a process of wasting time doing nothing except studying, working etc. It's a thief of time. And ~~it~~ it really steals our time often, doesn't it?

My opinion is pretty the same. Unfortunately, now in the age of post-industrial society we've got sometimes too much information around. And really often it's not very beneficial for us. For example, literally millions of people spend their lives watching contentless videos every day. That's a perfect appearance of procrastination.

I also suffer from procrastination sometimes. But in my case it's different from a common one. My obsession is playing guitar or piano while I ~~should~~ should do my homework, for instance. Often I have to stay up late to complete all the tasks for the next day.

We should definitely fight procrastination every time it chooses us as its victim. Otherwise, ~~all~~ all our achievements will be steeled by a stupid time-wasting. We should never hesitate starting doing our daily duties. We should fight ~~an~~ avoidance of ~~the~~ necessary work when it's time.

In conclusion, procrastination is a wide-spread problem nowadays. Luckily, I'm pretty certain that everybody can deal with it. So let's listen to Charles Dickens' words.
